Career opportunities at CAD Concepts

CAD or computer aided draughting is used by many different types of businesses for managing production, designing new facilities, the day to day maintenance and upgrade of existing plant, and numerous other purposes.

Many companies do not have dedicated CAD staff, which can place them at a disadvantage when dealing with clients.

This has opened up career opportunities for people with CAD skills, which can be utilised in many industries.

You can get the skills you need to start a career in CAD with CAD Concepts, which offers CAD training for people who are new to CAD, and is developing courses to cater for more advanced users.

CAD Concepts can also tailor courses to the particular needs of a business.

All courses include sample templates, a custom menu, and some simple symbol libraries.

Their aim is to get you up and running with CAD as quickly and painlessly as possible.

The next course starts on April 18.

Bricscad training courses are suitable for people wanting to use AutoCAD. The principals and commands are essentially the same, and the support material provided will also work with AutoCAD.

CAD Concepts director Jason Bourhill is a qualified engineer and design draughtsman.

In addition to conducting the CAD courses, he provides a range of CAD consultation and project management services to businesses.

Jason is also an agent for Bricscad software which provides most of the capabilities of AutoCAD at a small fraction of the cost.

It is highly compatible with AutoCAD, which means AutoCAD and Bricscad users can work on files in either system. More than 160 applications can run on Bricscad.
